Hi! My name is Pamela. I have a lot of friends at school and we mostly have fun while we're doing something, but I cannot call all of them my real friends. Most people believe that if you get on well with someone, it's enough to have a great friendship with him/her. However, I disagree with them, because getting on well with someone doesn't mean he/she is one of your true friends. To me, there are other important things that a true friend should have. For example, they must be honest. I just hate lies. Secondly, true friends should always be supportive. When I need them, they must always be there to help me.
